ference in a Denver hospital room Mr. Eisenhower also was expected to inform Bulganin that the United States still is working on a broader disarmament. broader disarmament program.

Talked With Stassen It was learned that Dulles, before going to Denver, held a conference here Sunday with Harold E. Stassen, Mr. Eisenhower's special disarmament adviser. The recommended letter to Bulganin and Dulles' disarmament statements at the Miami American Legion convention on Monday were discussed by Dulles and Stassen, it was said.

Mr. Eisenhower's letter will be made public as soon as it is handed to Bulganin. It is expected to be conciliatory and indicate American willingness to accept some features of Russia's proposed arms inspec-tion plan if the Reds will accept the President's offer on blueprints and "massive reconnaissance." Pre-Disarmament Plan

The President also was certain to emphasize that the blueprintreconnaissance plan was not dis-armament in itself — but an important step toward building confidence which could lead to disarmament. It has been tagged inside the administration as a "pre-disarmament plan."

Bulganin, in his letter to the President, avoided acceptance or outright rejection of Mr. Eisenhower's blueprint-inspection plan. He repeated Russia's familiar demand for reducing arms first and prohibiting the use of nuclear weapons.

DOVER, England IP- Florence hadwick set an all-time Englandto-France swimming record today, an official observer of the Channel

Swimming Assn. reported.
Mrs. Kaye Law, the observer, reported the corrected time of the Chadwick swim across the English Channel, was 13 hours and 55 minutes, which was 11 minutes better than the men's record established by Bill Pickering Aug. 27.

According to an earlier unofficial clocking, the attractive 35-year-old San Diego, Calif., mermaid missed beating Pickering's mark by three

But Mrs. Law said that Miss Chadwick began her swim from St. Margaret's on the Dover Coast at 10:23 a. m. Tuesday and reached the French shore at 12:18 a. m.

"The official time is 13 hours, 55 minutes and this will be put be-fore the association," Mrs. Law

Miss Chadwick set the mark even though she was forced to fight her way through a school of jelly In Smaller Group Phone 673 fish off the French coast.

The thick coating of grease was nearly worn off and provided no protection against the jelly fish. But she fought on and climbed out onto the French shore, shaking with cold and covered with stings. "I think I'll quit the channel now and do Lake Ontario next year. It is time somebody got that record back for the United States,' she said

Knight vs. Nixon: Grudge Fight? California Governor May Block VP

NEA Staff Correspondent SAN FRANCISCO—(NEA)— A deep-set personal feud that may build into an historic political grudge-fight stands in the way of the president ambitions Vice President Richard M. Nixon is expected to pursue if President Fig.

pected to pursue if President Eisenhower says he won't run in 1956.

Daily the breach grows wider between Nixon and his opposite number in this flaring combat-California's Gov. Goodwin J. Knight. Should it be stretched to the limit, the Vice President's hopes for the White House might be

For Knight seems determined to deny Nixon more than partial support from his home state. And political experts believe Nixon is not well placed to outdo his adversary. They feel any all-out struggle by him to gain full control of the critical prize-California's 70-member delegation to the 1956 convention-would be launched at grave risk.

Few men who know California politics think Nixon would win such a test. None imagines that if he lost he could carry that black mark into the convention and still win the nomination.

The prospect is almost without parallel. Measured by public opinion polls and the views of many GOP party leaders across the country, Nixon is the leading presidential candidate of the Republicans. Yet the state that gave him political birth threatens to pull him

Nothing remotely like it has loomed since Indiana Republican chieftains gave Wendell Willkie a political hotfoot in 1944 to help dash his chances for a second nomina-

Knight plans to shape a delegate slate of independent-minded Republicans nominally pledged to him as "favorite son" but representing many walks and diverse

It is doubted that Nixon would dare to offer a rival slate of his own, as things now stand. Experts figure his best hope would be to woo delegates on the Knight

Should certain events improve Nixon's position nationally, however, the view here is that his chances in California would rise materially. But before examining these possibilities, let's look at the feud which so imperils him today.

From the Knight side, it can be summarized as founded on political distrust, an assortment of alleged personal slights which reinforce that feeling, and the declared conviction that Nixon is not electable. As for the distrust: Knight charges (and Nixon deleged agreement over Knight's 1954 choices for state party office. These are the items in Knight's Little Black Book against Nixon: When he licked the Vice President in the 1954 squabble over party offices, he had another powerful Californian, Sen. William Know-land, lending his weight. Most ex-perts think the GOP Senate Min-ority Leader would stand with Knight again if a bigger showdown came. The most the Nixon forces appear to hope for is Knowland's neutrality

The Senator, often mentioned himself as a 1956 presidential figure, is playing his cards close to his broad chest. He has said nothing about his candidacy or where he might cast his strength in a finish fight between Knight and "I am afraid Mr. Lynch has to underestimated his own duties. I have no need of bodyguards. Aboard my own ship my own person, I trust, will be quite secure. My requirement is rather to have by me two trustworthy and disinterested men. I will not trouble you with details, but it is in the nature of this undertaking that I include among the Vittoria's passengers persons about whom I have less information than I should like to have." He smiled.

'You are trustworthy, Mr. "Entirely. And up to this moment at least, disinterested.'

I started. The person to whom he spoke had entered the soft-carpeted room without my knowledge. The tall, gracefully thin gentleman whom Lynch now bustled forward to introduce as Reginald Dibble, was exceedingly handsome. Even the most masculine observer could not fail to be aware of Mr. Dibble's fine cleft chin, his justoff-the-perpendicular forehead and truly splendid high-bridged nose. A Riviera suntan, a yellow silk bandada tucked in the open collar of a white shirt, and a pair of terra-cotta colored linen slacks added to the effect.

Reginald Dibble's handshake was negligent. But his hazel eyes struck me as being only a degree cold and intelligent than

"By that diminutive," he said, "you may gather my suzerain lord demands my opinion of you. I've already given it. I looked you up. I said you'd do.'

Dibble flashed upon me a brilliant and charming smile. It was a pity it was as automatic as a subway gum machine.

"Though I've never been able to persuade him of it," he chatted on, "Viggo is an abominable host. He is convinced that all the role requires is that he should pay for everything. An admirable trait, of course, but it adds to my sim

As if on cue, a white jacketed steward came in with a laden silver tray. Quickly he placed a low cocktail table before Sand's knees and whisked the necessary number of chairs in place around it.

Dibble distributed the drinks to the accompaniment of a cheerful rattle of small talk. Not until he leaned back in his chair and began gently rolling a tall glass be tween his slender, sunburned hands did he return to business.

"You believe then, Mr. Deane, said Dibble in his mocking-mannered voice, "you are qualified to keep us from bickering over Viggo's monstrous treasure? To keep the peace? To prevent a general slaughter?'

"If you're bent on slaughter, Mr. Dibble, I am sure you'll have your way. You look a man of purpose.'

"Oh, I am! I am indeed."
"However," I went on, "while
Mr. Lynch and I are aboard I don't think it would be too boastful to promise that anyone who fails to keep the peace will be caught at

Mr. Dibble returned my smile. "If the Vittoria hoisted two metric tons of gold aboard" (I heard Viggo Sand's tongue give a tiny "would it corrupt you? Would you betray or kill or do all manner of dreadful things to get your hands on some of it?"

I looked at him. For all the careful laughter which underlay Reginald Dibble, for his part, would. I shook my head.

"Perhaps it's only because I've never been tempted. One never really knows, does one? But my chosen trade is a graduate school teacher of medieval history. At New Haven I am an amateur of criminology. I've found neither very profitable. Does that answer your question?"

"I know your two books, of course," said Mr. Dibble handsomely. "Ostrogothic Spain' and "The Descendants of Attila'." 'The Descendants of Attila'.'

At that time, I gather, the need for two 'disinterested and trustworthy' men had not occurred to you. Instead of sailing directly for the islands, you put in, how-year, in New York. You there sought the services of an experienced and dependable private detective. Mr. Lynch happened to be available and you employed him. As a further measure ofwhat shall I say?-defense, you then advised him to bring along a partner. Not in crime, but in crime prevention. Here I am, and I am very grateful.
